The Vision

Croudace Homes set out to create this Burgess Hill play area as an engaging, inclusive space for residents of its new housing development, not just a play area but a hub for the whole estate. The brief called for a safe, high-quality recreational space that worked for every age group and ability, from toddlers through to teenagers, combining a full playground with a genuine Multi-Use Games Area for football, basketball and tennis rather than treating sport as an afterthought. The goal throughout was to encourage active lifestyles and help build a genuine sense of community as new residents moved in.

The Solution

Caloo installed a full Robinia playground, seesaw, multiplay unit and clamber stack, sized for toddlers through to teenagers so the space keeps working as children grow. A Robinia swing and single basket swing sit alongside it for inclusive swinging. Next to the playground, a full-size Multi-Use Games Area with line markings, removable tennis net posts and free-standing five-a-side goals gives older children and adults football, basketball and tennis in one space, so there's somewhere for every age to be active.

The Impact

This Burgess Hill play area has transformed the development, giving residents of every age a reason to spend time outdoors together rather than staying indoors. Toddlers and juniors now have their own dedicated play space supporting social development and motor skills, while the MUGA gives older children and adults an outlet for football, basketball and tennis on their own doorstep. Benches and a litter bin round out a space built to stay welcoming and well-maintained as the estate grows.

Key Considerations

Caloo installed this large-scale project through the winter months, working around unpredictable weather rather than pausing the build. Regular communication with Croudace Homes kept the installation on schedule without cutting corners on quality.

Why Caloo?

- Playground designed for the full age range, toddlers to teenagers
- A genuine MUGA for football, basketball and tennis, not a token games area
- Project management that kept a large winter build on schedule
